Warm Ups Start

In College Baseball

Looking at the snow-covered hillside, Coach R. J. Keenly, in thought the baseball season seemed remote. The only noise was the sound of a ball plinking against the fence; and the crisp crack of the bat, and the bitter chill of the wind. But he must keep the team in shape for the return trip to the campus. The season was organized without any financial support from the school. Money was made available to the home club by a small group of supporters for the purpose of supplying uniforms. The team succeeded in paying their expenses by a small percentage of the gate receipts and a small profit from the sale of equipment.
