CVC And Appalachian Community Service Network Offers Engineering Course

Fundamentals of Engineering, a 3 week evening course being offered by Clinch Valley College and the Appalachian Community Service Network is geared toward providing degree or equivalently-experienced engineers with material which will help them prepare for the Fundamentals of Engineering; Part I (also referred to in some states as the "Intern Engineer, I.E." examination and the "Engineer-In-Training E-I-T" examination.)

All persons who wish to become registered engineers must take the exam. Anyone taking or preparing for the course should have an adequate engineering background.

The class will be held on 3 consecutive Wednesdays beginning Wednesday, March 26 between 6:30 - 9:30 p.m. in the AV Room of the Library on the CVC campus.

The course consists of 12 half-hour video segments which will be viewed and then discussed by the class as a group. A group facilitator-monitor will be provided for the class by CVC. The 12 video segments are keyed to each of the chapters in the study text and they correspond with most of the subjects covered in the examination. A supplement to the text was prepared by ACSN using problems and solutions found in the Rust Engineering Review Manual to help participants become more familiar with problem types and solution methods.

Clinch Valley College will award 1 CEU (Continuing Education Unit) for the course. The fee is $7.00 plus a $5.00 registration fee. The text for the course, "Fundamentals of Engineering" is $30 and a Supplemental Problems and Solutions Manual will be provided at no cost.

If you, or anyone in your organization may be interested in this review course please call John Hackett at Clinch Valley College, 328-2431, ext. 248 before March 1, 1980 to pre-register.

Peake Chosen Regional Chairman

Clinch Valley College professor Dr. Richard H. Peake has been named Vice-Chairman (Western) for the Virginia Chapter of the Nature Conservancy. Peake's duties will consist of coordinating the efforts of Chapter members from Roanoke west.

The Virginia Nature Conservancy has recently hired a full-time professional, Bill Cole, whose office is in Charlottesville, Virginia. According to Peake, the hiring of Cole signals the coming-of-age of Virginia's fast-growing Chapter.

The Conservancy uses quiet but effective means to preserve America's natural heritage. It works through buying environmentally significant areas or by accepting these lands as gifts from public spirited donors. The Dismal Swamp National Wildlife Refuge and the Conservancy's Coastal Preserve on Virginia's Eastern Shore testify to the Conservancy's success in Virginia.

Area civic or other groups who would like a talk on the Nature Conservancy should contact Peake at Clinch Valley College by mail or phone (328-2431, ext. 263).

Womble Joins Staff

By patty Payne

If you have noticed a new face in the Administration Building, chances are you have seen Elaine Womble who has joined the staff as Secretary to the Dean of Students.

Mrs. Womble worked at VPI in Blacksburg for a period of five years in three different secretarial positions while her husband was enrolled there as an engineering student. She also was enrolled as a part-time student while at VPI.

When she came to Wise with her husband, Leonard, and their two children ten years ago, she found Wise to be "different from any place I ever had seen."

She recalled that she was used to big cities and said, "Wise seemed so remote." However, she believes her new job as Secretary to Bonnie Blosser will be beneficial and she stated firmly that she genuinely likes everyone she has met at CVC.

Mrs. Womble admits that she still misses the ocean (she came to Wise from Portsmouth) but she enjoys occasional trips to the Maritime provinces of Canada. In addition to traveling, her interests range from Puffins (a sea bird that nests in Canada) to the piano. "I've played the piano since I was four. That's my big thing," she confided.

Cellist To Perform At CVC

On February 19 cellist Evalyn Steinbock will offer a program of music by Locatelli, Franck, Brahms, and Bartok. The performance, sponsored by the Pro-Art Association, is set for 8:00 P.M. on Tuesday at the CVC Theatre Building.

Ms. Steinbock, who performed last year at Clinch Valley College, is a native of New York City. She holds a Bachelor and Master of Science degrees from the Juilliard School. She has studied with Bernard Greenhouse, Leonard Rose, Andre Navarra, Claus Adam, Pablo Casals, Stanley Wolfe, Nadia Boulanger, and Luciano Berio. A Fulbright scholar, she spent a year in Rome at the Conservatory of Santa Cecilia. As a soloist she has given recitals in the U.S. and in Europe, performing extensively in Italy and in France.

Accompanist for Ms. Steinbock is Lelan Parrott who made her debut playing the Schumann Piano Concerto with the Oldhama Symphony. A graduate of Juilliard, Ms. Parrott was a student of the late Rosina Lhevinne. Her New York City debut at Carnegie Recital Hall resulted in concert appearances all over the United States. She has performed at Harvard, Yale, Princeton, and in virtually every concert hall in New York City.

Tickets will be available at the door on the 19th for those who do not hold Pro-Art memberships.

Lecture-Film On Lamaze Set At CVC

"That's Our Baby" is the title of a film on the Lamaze method of prepared childbirth to be shown in the course of a lecture at Clinch Valley College on Tuesday, February 26.

The film and discussion about Lamaze will be presented by Peggy Dotson, Director of Nursing at Wise Clinic who is certified to teach Lamaze through Virginia Commonwealth University, and Jackie Orr, a registered nurse and certified Lamaze instructor through ASPO. The program is presented as part of the continuing Lecture Series at Clinch Valley College.

In the lecture Ms. Dotson and Ms. Orr will discuss local hospitals which have facilities for Lamaze and area physicians who regularly work with parents who choose this method of child delivery. Time will be allotted for questions from the audience.

The lecture is scheduled for 7:00 P.M. in the Lecture Hall of the CVC Science Building. It is open to the general public and parents who are interested in learning more about the Lamaze method are especially encouraged to attend.

On The Map

The English language owes a lot to wars. Just consider or a moment how many words are peculiar only to wars, battles, and violence. If wars never existed words like warhead, missile, machine gun, and bombs would have no meaning. There could be no meaning for shell shock or battle fatigue and a tank would be something for fish to live in. School children would probably never know where Korea, Vietnam or Afghanistan is. Should it not be that way from the start? In the past the quickest way to put a third world backward country on the map is to start a quaint little military intervention. The only problem is how do you land a B-52 on a cow pasture? In the past the purposes of wars seems more clearly defined, but in recent years purposes has seemed to evade the spirit in which the aid was given. Can one fight for something when he is unsure of what that something is? Deprivation of human freedom has long been the call for war. These wars, for independence of a people's freedom, are clearly defined for those who have or are being directly deprived of those basic rights. But to other nations and their people this calls into play questions of man, God, and earth. What are our moral obligations to these human brothers. What are those responsibilities and what are one's personal obligations to themselves, their God, and to that very country to which allegiance is held. This calls into question the basis of human civilization as a whole and man's relation to others. This question must be answered by each individual. But there can be only one course to follow, to that which will be the only logical conclusion; one of which that guarantees the status quo. There are many ways of aiding others who share in the same belief in freedoms, and basic human rights, as we do. I for one just hope we can do it without putting Afghanistan on the map, or perhaps taking it off completely.

Sincerely,
Val Deskins

Refree Fouls

Editor,
This letter has been inspired by our discontentment with the conditions currently found in women's intramural basketball. It is a state objective of this College to offer every student an opportunity to engage in sports. Students currently participating in intramural sports have seen enough of the way the system operates to recognize the fact that although the selection of sports offered may be good, the selection of officials is not. Referees are an essential part of basketball and one which the women's intramural teams are being forced to do without. The gentlemen running around with whistles bouncing up and down on their chests may look impressive, but their performance has not been so convincing. The apathetic attitude exhibited by the officials has ranged from their apparent ignorance of the rules to the manipulation of the scoreboard while it was under the direct supervision of the director of intramurals. The deliberate unwillingness of the referees to call fouls has led to truly disgusting situations in which people are being injured. We trust you realize that these extremes are but a few examples of what is actually happening on the courts. What we're trying for here is a very high overview of a potentially dangerous situation in terms of the problems thus far encountered. To conclude, we must point out that the job of officiating a basketball game is much more complex and subtle procedure than it first appears. It calls for understanding, tact, and a degree of maturity that few people possess. Most of the referees are committing atrocities that would turn the stomach of Attila the Hun. Action needs to be taken before someone is seriously hurt. Think about it, won't you.

The S.A. Bug Is Spreading

Once again the student spathy bug rears its ugly head on the campus of Clinch Valley College. Recently, the SGA and the Honor Court have found it impossible to meet due to a lack of attendance. I realize that at the end of January the snow prevented people from traveling. However, for the past few weeks, the weather has not been what one could call inclement.

Gross negligence of responsibility is the problem. The students campaign each spring for various positions. In the course of their campaign, empty promises are made by students who claim they will change the pathetic history of CVC. In fact, they just continue in the same trace as their predecessors. It is incomprehensible to me why students campaign for a position only to neglect it. If one "campaigns" so to speak, for a job, does that person sit back and do nothing after he gets the job. Of course not, he'd be fired. The same principle applies here. I realize that students don't get paid for these positions. However, that isn't the point here. If a student campaigns for a position, several assumptions have to be made about the student--by the student body. They are:

1. The student is responsible.
  2. The student has a genuine interest in the position.
  3. The student is willing to work and give up some of his/her free time.
  4. The student feels he can represent the students' views clearly and completely.
- Evidently, there are unmet characteristics for some of the present SGA and Honor Court members. They obviously could care less if the students' views are represented. What can be done about this situation? One answer is to abolish all student organizations which show little student interest. As a leader of a campus organization, I encounter apathy every week. However, since it is commonplace for the SGA and Honor Court, I don't feel singled out. Students are constantly complaining there's nothing to do at CVC. Who's fault is it?

Students On Board Of Visitors?

Dear Editor,
After reading the letter from Jeff Wohl that was published in the Highland Cavalier, I have decided to reveal more recent information concerning the proposed student representative to the Board of Visitors. I have worked with the Student Council at the University of Virginia on the matter since the summer 1979. Clinch Valley College was asked to arouse support for the bill in southwest Virginia. I found this impossible because the Student Council of CVC has not met but once since school has started in 1980. The bill was not written until late January. I have held it since February 1 without the council's awareness, because of the fact that we have not met. Since last week's letter concerning the bill, many interesting incidents have developed. The Speaker of the House of Delegates placed the bill in the Privileges and Elections Committee. The student lobbyists in Richmond had hoped that the bill would have been placed the Education Committee or at least referred to that Committee. The Privileges and Elections Committee held a hearing on Wednesday, February 13 at 11:00 a.m. to hear arguments for and against the bill. The bill was killed in committee by a 9-11 vote on the same day. John Serpe, President of the Student Council at U. VA. said "Even though the bill was defeated I was satisfied!" The bill had received much support in the last moments and almost passed. Serpe is very optimistic about the future of the bill next year. Had the bill passed the General Assembly without the Governor's veto, a student of Clinch Valley College would have been elected to a six-year position on the Board of Visitors for the University of Virginia.

Sincerely yours,

Members Unable To Say Presente'

Editor
For the past 3 weeks our famed SGA has failed to meet a set quorum of voting members. I realize the snow was at fault for 2 weeks, but an attempt was made on the 18th, and 14th to hold a meeting and once again failing to have a quorum. I realize apathy is a high priority among many CVC students, but I thought the members of the SGA were supposed to be a little more active. There have been several resignations this year and from all indications maybe others should consider this, or better yet, maybe the SGA should just be abandoned for the remainder of the year. If the members that the student body entrusted to this position can't show any more interest than I have witnessed this past week, maybe its time for a long, hard look at who we choose. It seems to me that most elections held at CVC turn out to be vote for who is the most popular, not who will do the best job. In all probability I will be leaving this campus next year, so I really don't think the next election will concern me, but I can't help to feel sorry for the new members as they must inherit the name this year's SGA has made for itself.

'I'm A Pawn, You're A Pawn, We're All Pawns'

How Big College Sports Use Small Colleges, Sometimes Without Grades

By Steve Palmer

Oxnard College in California doesn't look like much. Situated on a few treeless acres 40 miles north of Los Angeles, the 5,000-student campus quietly services a local community preoccupied with the orange and housing industries.

Until recently its primary diversion was provided by a 22-year-old basketball player named Craig Gilbert, who last year led the Oxnard team to an impressive 28-5 season and a berth in the state small-college basketball tournament. Gilbert's performance was exciting enough to draw the attention of even University of New Mexico basketball recruiter Manny Goldstein. Indeed, Goldstein successfully convinced Gilbert to transfer to New Mexico for the 79-80 season. But the recruitment, and a fluke discovery by police officials, started what is probably the worst college sports scandal since the early 1960s.

The scandal revolves around allegations that sports programs at New Mexico, Arizona State, San Jose State, Oregon, Oregon State and Utah (a number of other schools are also under investigation) falsified the academic records of some of its athletes to help them meet NCAA eligibility requirements.

The allegations have raised a number of serious questions about the lengths to which some universities will go to assemble winning teams. Not least of the questions is how big-time sports programs can maintain both small-time colleges like Oxnard and ambitious small-college players like Gilbert.

All the questions were raised almost by mistake last March when the New Mexico Organized Crime Strike Force, investigating illegal gambling operations, tapped a phone conversation between Goldstein and New Mexico head coach Norman Eilenberger that implicated both in a reported scheme to fix Craig Gilbert's college transcripts and make him eligible to play for the Lobos this season.

Goldstein, according to law enforcement charges, had an Albuquerque printer manufacture an official seal of 7200-student Mercer County Community College in Trenton, N. J. Goldstein allegedly used the seal to make bogus Mercer credits appear legitimate, and then, according to prosecutors, arranged to have those fake credits mixed in with Gilbert's Oxnard credits.

Investigators subsequently charged that Goldstein conspired with Oxnard trainer Robert Maruca to pay Oxnard Admissions Dr. John Wooly $300 to mix in the fake Mercer credits with Gilbert's real Oxnard credits, and thus make the player eligible to transfer to and play for New Mexico.

And on November 23, FBI agents in Los Angeles intercepted a forged Mercer transcript that had been mailed special delivery from New Jersey.

That's when the scandal began to unravel. "We were at practice one afternoon and these guys in suits came in," Gilbert remembers. "They looked like policemen, and some of us joked about their being from the phone company. They took us into a room one-by-one, and asked us if we had ever been paid to play ball, did we know about any gambling...stuff like that. They asked me if I knew I was ineligible to play because of my transcripts. I told them no."

The suited guys were FBI agents who, after further questioning, discovered that at least six other Lobo players had questionable credits on their transcripts.

The Albuquerque investigation, following a trail of small-college and extension service credits, soon spread to cast doubt on the academic records of athletes at Oregon State, the University of Utah, and the University of Oregon.

In some cases, athletes had gotten academic credit without ever attending class. In some others, the athletes hadn't even known they'd been enrolled in the classes.

Rock Richmond and Mike Honeycutt of Oregon received credit from extension courses offered by Rocky Mountain College of Billings, MT., and Ottawa (KS) University. Neither player had ever attended class. When Oregon State found that football player Leroy Edwards had also received credit from Ottawa, it checked further to find a bogus grade from a Florida junior college. And though University of Utah basketball player Danny Vranes was originally cleared of charges that his Ottawa credit was improper, he was subsequently ruled ineligible to play, and Utah had to forfeit five basketball games this season. Similar instances of academically-ineligible students playing have caused Arizona State and San Jose State to forfeit games as well.

Goldstein and Eilenberger, meanwhile, have been forced to resign, and face criminal charges of phone and mail fraud.

Otherwise, the players are the ones paying most of the price of the scandal so far. Gilbert, who couldn't meet NCAA transfer requirements of at least 48 hours of credit and a 2.0 grade point average, is only one of about a dozen basketball players who can't perform this year.

Gilbert himself comes from the poor side of the tracks in Santa Barbara, CA. Pining his hopes on his basketball skills, he gained a name for himself at Santa Barbara High School and then at Santa Barbara City College.

City College Athletic Director Bob Danaberg remembers Gilbert as not much of a student, but "a hell of a ball player." In fact, at the end of his first City College season, Gilbert found himself short of credits, and was ruled ineligible for the next season.

He'd repaired his grades by the 1978-79 season, which he spent at Oxnard, a team that usually gets a little more press. It was after an Oxnard-L.A. Trade Tech game that Gilbert was first approached by Manny Goldstein.

"He came up and asked me if I wanted to take a ride," Gilbert says. "But rumors of over-aggressive recruiting at New Mexico made Gilbert wary." Some friends told me it was like Las Vegas," referring to the University of Nevada-Las Vegas basketball program, which has been repeatedly scrutinized and barred from championship play for high-pressure recruiting practices. "They said it wouldn't be long before they (New Mexico) were caught. But I decided to take the ride with this guy, and I saw the crowd at the Pit (UNM's arena), and decided 'this is the place.'"

Gilbert's story is not atypical. "There are any number of young men who are put in these institutions who don't belong there," exclaims George Kilian, executive director of the National Junior Colleges Athletic Association (NJCAA).

But big colleges court small college players for several good reasons. Carman DiPoalo, football coach at Santa Barbara City College, explains, "The advantage that the junior college player represents is that the recruiters are looking for players to fill particular needs. The and leaves without any degree." But players aren't the only victims. "I'm finished," sighs Bob Maruca, the Oxnard trainer through whom Goldstein allegedly tried to fix Gilbert's transcript. Sitting in the converted trailer that houses Oxnard's athletic department, he swears, "It's ridiculous. All I do here is coach soccer and train the kids." He picks up a soccer ball, and spins it. "Now I won't find a job anywhere."

Asked why schools would condone such shady practices, Maruca silently takes a slip of paper, and writes one word on it: Boosters.

For now, he says he'll probably return to New Mexico to finish the academic year. Though ineligible, he still thinks about playing big-college ball somehow, somewhere. He says he's considering transferring again, this time to the University of Nevada-Las Vegas.

Dr. Wooly at the admissions office refused to talk to a reporter, except to snap, "I'm really incensed. I hadn't heard of Goldstein or Eilenberger until this thing came out in the papers."

And Gilbert is still confused and upset. "I was just playing basketball. I didn't worry about the transcript because they told me it was okay to play." More thoughtfully, he adds, "We got taken by fast talkers...by the fast recruiters."

Yet sometimes "the universities are kidding themselves if they think they can take these kids out of the junior colleges and expect them to perform academically." At the universities a kid plays his two years,

THE ADVENTURES OF JOE COLLEGE

Will The Real Ayatollah Please Stand Up?

However, Joe was able to subdue all fifteen of them by the use of a new American weapon, the Jalapeno pepper.

When the guards came to, they were stunned by the striking resemblance that Joe bore to the His Holiness. They fell down on their knees to worship him. They waited for some great words of wisdom to come from his hosiness' mouth. However, all they received was a resounding belch. They took this to mean that because of divine right he was to open the first national Pizza Hut Temple. After the erection of this monument, they worshipped their new ruler even more. They refused him no wish. Hundreds of beautiful women in veils and tap dancing shoes laid on pillows around him fanning him and popping pepperonis into his mouth.

He had everything. Beautiful women, loyal subjects, and indignation. It seems that Iranians cannot cook pizzas. Joe craved a good old fashioned, American pizza. But where was he to find it? An American is what he needed. But where was he to find one in Iran?

Joe knew he had seen Americans somewhere. They were staying in the Teheran Hilton and refused to come out for some unknown reason. He heard through the grapevine that they were chained to the old American ways and in some cases, to the floor.

Joe, at first, decided to release all the guests at the Hilton. However, this plan would not work because of the Canadians kidnapping them for their own pizza factories. So he decided to install pizza ovens in the Hilton. Hitler had the same idea in WWII, but he used a different variation of this method. Things went well for a while, then disaster struck!!! A report that oil reserves in Iran had mysteriously dried up and there was nothing to grease the pizza pans with. His subjects became disgruntled with their new ruler and got angry something fierce. They staged an uprising in which they staked him to forever live with the Shah, wherever he is.

Joe awoke with a start from this fiendish nightmare. He sat straight up in his bed. He was so taken aback by his dream that he sat there for a while wondering if it all was a dream. It had all seemed so real at the time. And how did those pepperoni stains get on the sheets?

Opportunities For 1980 Graduates Look Good

By Jerry Kilgore

In an exclusive interview with Winston Ely, Director of Placement at CVC, Ely commented on the job opportunities for the 1980 graduates of CVC. Ely said, "Job opportunities for CVC students have always looked good. By the following October after graduation 95-98 percent of students are placed in jobs." Ely however urged all students that are planning to graduate in May that the time for looking for jobs is not the day after you graduate but now.

Ely also reminded students that everyone should do a placement file with the Placement Office. This is a free service offered by the Placement Office.

"One of the most disheartening things that I've seen is to have someone come in that is ready to graduate and tell me that they don't like their field of study," Ely said. However there is a way to avoid uncertainty about a major. One should go to the Placement Office and ask about Co-op. In the Co-op study plan students are placed in related fields where they can investigate the advantages and disadvantages of their chosen fields of study.

Commenting on fields of study Ely said "We have always placed 100 percent of our Elementary Education majors. However, some secondary teaching positions are a little tight at this time." Other majors that have good job opportunities are Accounting, Computer, Business and Public Administration, Environmental Science, and English majors. However, he commented, "Students in Business will have to be more mobile. Most Business opportunities exist in urban areas."

"In graduate school CVC students have always performed. No one, to my knowledge, accepted to law school or medical school has flunked out," Ely commented.

Ely also wanted to remind the students that he has pamphlets available on several subjects. One cities good business manners when trying to apply for a job. Some manners are how to dress properly, write clearly and concisely, talk sense—and sensibly, overcome self-consciousness, meet, greet, and relate to other employees.

Another pamphlet tells of how to write a resume and a letter of application. When writing a resume one should not make it too long or too short; heap up all positive things in your past; list references on separate sheet paper; do not send school transcripts; tell about your part time jobs; set up your resume carefully and type it accurately. A third pamphlet tells one how to get started and get ahead on your new job. It tells one how to learn your job, how to get along with fellow employees, the common sense of company loyalty, and the importance of a good job attitude.

The last pamphlet cites examples for disabled people who are looking for jobs. All of these pamphlets can be picked up in the Placement Office.

Last, Ely said, "The Placement Office assists students in getting jobs but we don't get the jobs, the students do."

Focus...

Kathy Mahan, CVC's 1000 Point Scorer

This week the Highland Cavalier will focus on Women's Basketball star, Kathy Mahan. Kathy is the only senior on the squad and has earned an excellent record in her college career.

But college isn't the extent of her basketball career. In her home town of Jenkins, Kentucky, she was a member of her high school team for 3 years, holding the position of point guard. Since her school didn't award individual honors, she could only receive an All-State Honorable Mention. And, just as she has done this year, she attained a 1,000 point total for her career.

Her college career is as filled as her high school one. When the Lady Cavaliers played Randolph-Macon of Ashland, she reached the 1,000 point mark of her college career. She recalls that moment by saying, "for the first 30 seconds, I was in shock. Then it hit me and I realized what an accomplishment it was." In her position as a forward on the team, Kathy has become the leading scorer on the team this year. Also, she is ranked fifth in the state in scoring. She averages around 17 points per game. Kathy is known as a good team player and is very good on assists, as well as outside shots.

Kathy describes the team as being very close. But as in all groups, "we disagree occasionally, but always work things out." Kathy remarked on the team's record by saying, "It should be a little better, but we got a few problems." She predicts next year's team to be very good.

Kathy is majoring in Business Administrative Management. She's still undecided about what she wants to do after graduation. "I've got a few ideas, though," she said. "But Kathy is sure of what she'll miss about college, her friends and basketball."

Crackdown On GSL Defaulters Collars 218,000 Students

The government's effort to chase down students who default on financial aid loans have reached a new stage of success. The U.S. Office of Education reports that $42 million in 218,000 bad Guaranteed Student Loans (GSL) were collected in fiscal 1979 compared to about $10 million in 1977.

Leo Paszkiewicz, who helps administer GSLs for the Office of Education, adds the government's two-month-old crackdown on National Direct Student Loans (NDSL) is also starting to show results, though it is too soon to accurately evaluate the collection program.

There are currently about 240,000 "bad" NDSLs representing about $170 million still to be collected. The new crackdown has closed the books on around 100 NDSLs worth $222,000.

When the Office of Education launched its program to collect defaulted GSLs in 1977, there were 850,000 bad debts worth $400 million.

Paszkiewicz notes that there are still 600,000 loans under various kinds of financial aid programs that the government still can't do anything about because colleges haven't given them to Washington for collection yet.

Is There Life After Student Government?

Campuses That Dissolved Their Governments Find The Answer Is Yes The Biggest Complaint So Far: No Good Films On Campus

By Anita Brewer

Spring was usually quite on the campus of the University of Texas. The rain failed to bring up the normal crop of ornate, brightly-colored political posters. The sky was free of skywriting. The neighbor creators were gone. The reason was that a year before, in the spring of 1978, Texas students voted to dissolve their student government. They were followed by students at the University of Northern Colorado shortly thereafter, and, a year later, by students at the University of Georgia. There have also been other kinds of dissolution votes at other colleges - Auburn, for example, voted to decide whether to continue its student government every year - that stopped short of actually junking the government.

The fever, moreover, seems to be contagious. A group of University of Oklahoma students announced last week that they condemned the "needlessness" of the established Student Association, and pledged to set up a rival student government called "The Real Student Union" this fall.

With what seems to be gathering momentum, then, an important student institution appears to be cracking. Will anyone hear it fall? Is life on the campuses where student governments have been dissolved any different?

It was different at Northern Colorado. There was trouble allocating student fees, and the administration hurriedly helped create a new association last year to fill the gap.

Reports from Georgia and Texas, though, indicate that most students aren't any more aware of the governments' absence than they were aware of them when the governments existed.

About the only major effect dissolution has had on either campus is that Texas students have started to miss their film program.

UT's Student Association Film Program had been broad and inventive. Over the last year of its existence, it included such off-beat, hard-to-find offerings as "The First Nude Musical", a horror movie called "The Hills Have Eyes", a documentary called "Gay U.S.A.", and a trilogy by French director Marcel Pagnol. James Duncan, student affairs vice president, says the days of such an eclectic program are over now. A film program like the student association's, he points out, is "not appropriate to be carried by the administration."

The only other program that has died with the student government is a paper recycling effort.

At Georgia, where students abolished the SGA by a three-to-one margin last April, most government-administered programs have been adopted by other administrative units.

Dwight O. Douglas, Georgia's director of student affairs, explains that the university has 11 individual councils, a University Union that directs student programs, and a Student Judiciary Committee, which is responsible for hearing student conduct cases.

"I believe it is incorrect to assume that the abolishment of the SGA indicated less student involvement" in their academic fates, Douglas says. "At UG, students discovered that their needs were being met through more localized groups." The transition into official nar-chy was less smooth at Northern Colorado. Then again, the student government problem there was different from the ones at Texas and Georgia, where absurdist candidates had come to dominate the elections just prior to dissolution.

On The Way Back? At the Greeley, Colorado campus, the problem was born of personality conflicts between the student government's legislative and executive branches. When the conflict boiled over in May, 1978, all the members of the executive branch resigned, and the government was immobilized.

"We had to close it down," recalls UNC Dean of Students Jerry Tanner.

Yet a student government was necessary "because of financial obligations mandated by the state." Tanner thus took the initiative to form a Task Force on Student Government, composed of faculty, students, and administrative and support personnel.

The task force proposed a new government, wrote a new constitution, and shaped a Student Representative Council. Students approved the proposal last May. Voter turnout was nine percent higher than for the previous student government election. Administrators seem to be more upset about the dissolution of student governments than the students.

Texas' Dean of Students James Hurst believes the worst loss is political experience: the introduction to vote-getting, constituency building, and political organizing. He's fond of noting that former Texas Governor and current presidential candidate John Connally - as well as state Attorney General John Hill - first gained political experience in campus government. (Connally was SGA president at Texas in 1938).

Hurst's explanation for the dissolution is "that students were more preoccupied with the power and influence they didn't have than they were with the power and influence they did have."

Student government, he adds, "was seen as not effective, and clearly there was a growing disinterest among students."

Now he thinks the pendulum has begun to swing the other way in Austin. "My observation is of increasing concern among students for more direct representation." There's even been some talk of a referendum calling for a new student association.

"Nothing has happened so far," Hurst says. "The administration is clearly supportive of such a referendum, but we cannot take the initiative."

In Georgia, Douglas says a new proposal to replace the old SGA with an "at large" campus council is currently being considered in committee.

Movies

Wednesday, February 20-7:00 and 9:30 p.m.
REPULSION-Roman Polanski's direction is at its very best in this macabre and erotic story of a girl torn between her craving for and loathing of men. Her psychopathic tendencies are revealed bit by bit in a suspenseful tale of alarming reality. Everything about this movie makes your blood chill.

Sunday, February 24-7:00 and 9:00 p.m.
BOB AND CAROL AND TED AND ALICE-A racy, highly amusing, and often charming adult comedy about love and sex among young marrieds. Shrewdly observed and briskly paced, the story deals with two California couples. They seem to be headed towards conventional middle age until one couple, after spending a weekend at an encounter therapy group, decides to convert to new ethics of openness. The results are both hilariously complicated and poignantly realistic and the theme is dealt with tastefully and humorously.
