

During his visit to Clinch Valley Delegate Ford Quillen discussed future plans for CVC with Acting Chancellor Jerry Cardwell.

Delegate Quillen lectures at CVC

Kimberly Lee
HC Editor

Making Clinch Valley College a "... regional school for Southwest Virginia" seems to be one of Delegate Ford Quillen's top priorities these days. Quillen, a Virginia state Delegate for this area, has been instrumental in getting monetary appropriations for CVC from the Virginia General Assembly in past years.

In an interview with the Highland Cavalier, Quillen expressed his wish to allow CVC to expand. He, along with school officials, is currently working on many proposals designed to allow this to happen, as well as to get things for CVC that will enhance the school.

One of these proposals will allow CVC and Virginia Polytechnical Institute and State University to offer graduate programs in certain areas. These grad programs would be run through the University of Virginia.

Quillen stated that the articulation agreements CVC has signed with the various area community colleges are good and will work to

Nineteen applicants to be interviewed by Search Committee

Tammy Fultz
HC Staff Writer

This week the Chancellor's Search Committee is conducting conference call interviews to the remaining nineteen applicants in their attempt to help the President of the University of Virginia, Robert O'Neal, recommend the best candidate for the position of Chancellor of Clinch Valley College.

According to Van Daniel, Chairman of the CSC, at their next meeting (Sept. 25), committee members will collectively decide how many of the applicants will come to Clinch Valley for further consideration based on the results of the phone interviews and replies from references.

"We are looking for someone who is committed to serving our region and who will serve as a source to the public and respond to their needs," said Daniel.

"We also plan to release a tentative schedule informing students of when and where they can meet the candidates and provide a 'thumb nail' sketch of each of them," Daniel said. The committee is planning to interview two candidates per week during the month of October and will narrow the list to five applicants which will then be submitted to O'Neal for further consideration.

Daniel said the appointment will Please see SEARCH, page 3

It seems students aren't the only freshmen on campus this semester. Along with a startling amount of new faces, there are quite a few new cars in the faculty lot this year as well.

These new faculty members serve only to enhance Clinch

Valley's already expanding and optimistic academic outlook. They are all uniquely qualified in their fields and anxious to further the school and students in their education, so we want to wish all the freshmen, faculty and student alike, a wonderful and exciting first year at CVC.

Brickett voices SGA's purposes and goals for upcoming year

Rich Davidson
HC Staff Writer

"If you are not going to work and give 110 percent, then turn around and walk out the same door you just came in," was the opening statement by SGA president Jeff Brickett in his first meeting last semester. The same feelings have carried over to this year. The Student Government Association has started a string of several ideas in motion for this year.

Some ideas that were first voiced last year by Brickett at the presidential debates, are now being put into action under the new Student Government Administration. Two of these ideas turned objectives were to give the SGA a stronger, more powerful voice in the growth and development of the college, and to get the students more involved with their government. Brickett stated, "We want participation from the students."

Both of these objectives are beginning to take some shape and form as the semester begins to get underway. According to Brickett, the student government has just joined the United States Student Association, and is also in the process of becoming part of the Virginia Student Government Association. Membership in these two organizations will help the SGA lobby state and local governments for student and school aid. This membership will also give the student govern-

Boredom. It's a common and classic complaint of students here at Clinch Valley College. This year, however, the "boredom factor" seems to have crept upon us rather quickly. Only three weeks into the semester and complaints of boredom are circulating the campus.

Let's examine this mysterious "boredom factor" that seems to plague the CVC student body every academic year. What is it that makes CVC so boring? Most students would say that there aren't enough activities available to keep them occupied.

For some students with an interest in a particular area, this may be true. More than likely, though, lack of activities to participate in cannot be blamed for the boredom CVC students find themselves submerged in.

CVC offers a great number of activities in which a student may get involved. There are clubs, fraternities and sororities, chess and organizations, student committees, student publications, the Student Government, and many other things which promise to keep students busy.

The Pro-Art Association and the Student Entertainment Committee have many activities students can usually attend free of charge. These activities range from cultural performances to rock concerts and almost everything in between. There's usually something to satisfy all tastes.

Since it appears there isn't a lack of things going on around campus, why would students complain that they are bored?

In the past, activities have been made available to the students only to be met with minimal attendance. Is there something wrong with the entertainment that has been scheduled? I, for one, don't see that as the problem.

The problem, as I see it, stems from both students, faculty, and staff. Students need to get involved in the activities that CVC already provides. More importantly, though, the students of CVC need to take an active part in the planning of the activities to be presented.

Express your opinions and make your feeling known about the activities you wish to see. Faculty and staff members can do the same. We at the Highland Cavalier can try to keep you up to date, but we need your help to be successful. So let us know what appeals to you, what activities you enjoy.

CVC can be an exciting place to get an education if you let it. Get involved in what's going on around campus. Only YOU can keep yourself from getting bored.

Good luck for a semester full of fun and excitement.

CVC's 'Homecoming '87' to bring alumni back home

Bob Sloan
HC Staff Writer

Clinch Valley College's 1987 Homecoming, scheduled for the weekend of Dec. 11-12, will include many old students and a lot of fresh, new ideas.

The primary change from previous homecomings is that this year's event will evolve around the Bud Light/Highland Cavalier Basketball Classic. In year's past, the classic was sponsored by local businesses and was held as a separate event.

Along with the two-day basketball classic, other events such as an alumni reception on Friday night and the annual odd vs. even Alumni basketball game are scheduled.

"This past summer, the Alumni Board of Directors took on the responsibility of selling tickets for the classic and other homecoming events," Mullins said. "They came up with some very good ideas."

Wells was unavailable for comment.

"The concept of a package ticket to provide an alumnus the ability to pay for the weekend with one check," said Mullins.

Another important decision made by the Board of Directors was to establish a new alumni scholarship. All receipts from package tickets and the basketball classic will be made into a scholarship fund.

The scholarship will be provided for children of retired, disabled or unemployed coal miners.

Along with the package and gate receipts, Mullins said the school hopes to get local coal businesses to help sponsor the weekend and possibly make a donation towards the scholarship fund.

"It's basically a 'what you give with, in turn, come back to you' type of deal," Mullins said.

"We have the potential to raise 10 to 15 thousand dollars over Homecoming weekend, if everything goes as planned," Mullins said.

Medieval - Renaissance conference set for Sept. 25 at CVC

Jeff McFarland
HC Staff Writer

This Friday, September 25, Clinch Valley College will host its first-ever Medieval-Renaissance Conference. Scholars from various areas of the country will convene at the Chapel of All Faiths to lecture and discuss topics related to the Middle Ages and the Renaissance.

Jack Mahony, Professor of English, has initiated and will direct the event. Mahony believes that this conference will provide CVC students a rare chance to listen to, discuss with, and actually meet scholars who have come from as far as Wisconsin and Massachusetts.

The Conference will be held from 8 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. and will be divided into four sessions. Each session will be devoted to a general aspect of life in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance. "Topics will range from philosophy and art to sports and politics," said Mahony.

According to Mahony, all of the speakers are scholars in their particular subjects, and most have written books. "Students are encouraged to attend and investigate an area in which they haven't been interested in before," Mahony stated. After each lecture, there will be a discussion period in which the scholars will question each other. Students are welcome to participate in the discussions if they want.

Four Clinch Valley professors will be moderators at the conference, one for each session: David Rouse, Augusto A. Portuondo, Richard H. Peake, and Betty Gilliam.

On Friday night, a troubadour featuring Medieval instruments and music, will be held in the Chapel of All Faiths.

Student addresses new sorority's identity

Dear Editor,

It has come to my attention that several people on campus do not understand the purpose and affiliations of CVC's newest sorority, Pi Beta Kappa.

As the constitution and helped the new members organize Pi Beta Kappa, but that is where any affiliation with the Pi Kappas ends.

Pi Beta Kappa is an independent organization. They are NOT "Kappa Little Sisters," nor shall they ever be.

As it was intended in the beginning, Pi Beta Kappa is circulating applications to national organizations so that they may become CVC's first national sorority.

Comments have been made that Pi Beta Kappa is the "Pi Kappa Sorority." Yes, Pi Kappa Phi did initiate the newest chapter of a national sorority.

Those who wish to criticize members of Pi Beta Kappa are requested to keep your prejudices to yourselves. If you have a problem with Pi Kappa Phi, don't take it out on the Pi Betas - be adult enough to bring it to the Pi Kappas.

The Pi Kappas are very proud to say that they helped to get Pi Beta Kappa off the ground and wish them the best of luck in the future. We are certain that they will soon Education means more than 'getting a job'

Jim Colie
Campus Minister

"What am I doing here?" That question may never enter your mind this semester or any other semester while you are at Clinch Valley College. For some of us the question was answered in our decision to get a college education. For others the question will be constant companion all of our college days.

Well, what are you doing here? I have a friend who speaks realistically of "Hire Education." Education should prepare and credential us for the job market. And it does. But an education is both product and process. It is ends and means combined in a paradoxical equation that almost demands that one ask, "What am I doing here? What am I about here?"

The Old Testament book of I Kings describes for us the beginning struggle with the question "What am I doing here?" by a young man of college age many years ago. (I Kings 3). He was in a very privileged position. For that matter, so are you. He chose means over ends and achieved both. He chose wisely and his very name has been associated with wisdom to this very day.

So, what are you doing here?

Tiller encourages students of age to vote

Welford Tiller
UCA Minister

Reprinted with permission.

November 3 is Election Day. It is not one of those years in which federal or statewide offices are up for grabs, but it is a significant election nonetheless. On that day the voters will decide whether the Commonwealth of Virginia will operate a statewide lottery. This is not an advisory referendum. If we vote in favor, the lottery becomes law and will be put into operation. No further action will be needed by the legislature.

I will have more to say about the lottery itself in the future (personally, I am opposed to it), but for now the issue is voting. No matter what your opinion is about the lottery, you will not be able to express that opinion in a meaningful way on November 3 if you have not registered to vote. Of course, registration is also required to be able to vote on candidates for local offices. As Christians we should be expected to be responsible citizens, and a minimum activity for a good citizen is to cast a thoughtful vote.

Most college students are old enough to vote. To register to vote in Virginia you must be a Virginia resident who will be at least 18 by the next general election. If you are currently 17 years of age you may register now to vote as long as your 18th birthday is before November 3.

If you have not already registered, you must do so very soon. You must register no later than 30 days before the next election. That leaves you only about three weeks. Furthermore you must register in person in the city or county of your residence. Many localities have special hours and locations for registration at this time of year.

Once you are registered, what about voting? Most students who are away at school vote by absentee ballot. Obtain an application for an absentee ballot from any registrar. Fill it out and mail it to the registrar of your community of residence. The ballot will be mailed to you. Vote the ballot, and return it by mail or in person to the electoral board of your community. It must be received no later than election day.

Maybe it all seems a little complicated, but our responsibility to express our views about the way our society governs itself is important to us as citizens and as Christians. Register and vote!

then be made by the Board of Visitors of the University of Virginia at their January meeting and that CVC will have a Chancellor on campus sometime between January or July of 1988. He added that the committee realizes the importance of their task and wants to be honest with itself and its constituents.

The 1985 retirement of Chancellor Joseph Smiddy after seventeen years of service lead to the appointment of Ned Moomaw in 1986. However, on December 12, 1986, the faculty called for his resignation. Jerry Cardwell assumed the position of Acting Chancellor on January 5, 1987.

Cardwell is applying for the position of Chancellor.

Van Daniel also pointed out that the "internal candidate" is being weighed equally with everyone else.

Medical services at CVC provided for most ailments

Mark Salyer
HC Staff Writer

Racing madly toward the steps, fifteen minutes late for Western Civ., you keep walking but your feet don't. Two flights of stairs later you lie helpless on the floor of Zehmer, certain that you have broken every imaginable bone in your body. What in the name of Marcus Welby do you do?

Well, if you can crawl to your maimed feet, Nurse Wilma Pannell awaits in the basement of McCrary Hall from 8:00 to 12:00 daily, ready to provide a wide range of medical services including emergency treatment, pregnancy testing, Pap-smears, common cold treatment, and yes, even first-aid for minor stair-tumbling wounds.

In addition to a nurse, Student Health offers the services of a doctor for four hours a week. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, Dr. Eleanor Cantrell is on campus from around 8:30 to 10:30.

Pannell said services are free of charge to full-time CVC students with the exception of certain tests such as Pap-smears which require minimal charges.

What if you make it to Student Health at exactly 12:01 though? Or worse yet, what if you really did break every imaginable bone in your body and you need medical treatment beyond what Student Health can provide?

According to Richard Prior, Assistant Business Manager of the college, CVC has had an agreement with St. Mary's Hospital in Norton since August of 1986 to take care of those very situations. The hospital's Star-Care program supplies students with services beyond those covered by the school nurse or doctor.

CVC pays for emergency room treatment and an initial doctor's examination any time of the day when the nurse and doctor are not on campus, explained Prior. Students must take their Star-Care cards which were given out with the new I.D.'s at registration.

Eda Anderson, Supervisor of Admissions at St. Mary's, said that additional coverage provided by the hospital includes a 50% discount off the insurance deductible as well as a 10% discount off the amount not covered by insurance for medical treatment beyond emergency or the initial visit. Again, students must have their Star-Care cards with them, Anderson said.

Do students abuse the medical benefits provided by the college as excuses for missing class? "Absolutely not," Pannell said. If anything, she added, the offered services are not 100% utilized.

With right planning, Dorm rooms can be more homey

Jennifer James
HC Staff Writer

For most students, the first look at a dorm room is a shocking experience. Four dully painted block walls and a window. Pretty dull, huh? Only you can turn this box into a home.

Due to limited space you should be careful about the amount of stuff you bring from home. If there's room, you can always bring more back when you go home. It is also a good idea to bring boxes or small crates in which to store things. These can easily be put underneath the bed or stacked neatly in a corner.

Students who know their roomate(s) can make plans about what to bring. This can include things from bedspreads and curtains down to who brings the beds and dustpan.

On the other hand, many students don't know their roomate(s); especially freshman and transfer students. So—to keep things from clashing, buy your bedthings in a neutral color. Most things can wait until you are settled. Then you can go to a nearby store together and buy the other things you may need.

It is also very important to know which items are personal and which are to be shared. This is a problem faced by many roomates, even those who have known each other for awhile. Some people are too generous with personal items, only to get them damaged or destroyed. When this happens, tempers rise and trouble starts. Then there are those who are paranoid about their belongings and get angry if their roomate even steps on their side of the room. There is a difference between cautiously sharing and being paranoid.

For the most part, different people bring all sorts of different things; but most agree on several items that remind them of home:

Refrigerator
Pictures of family and friends
Posters; the favorites are Garfield and members of the opposite sex
Bedspreads and comforters
Cheerful curtains
Homemade quilts
Some highschool souvenirs
Plants or flowers* Don't forget to water them*
Rug or small carpet
Stuffed animals

Another thing to remember is that most colleges don't allow nails to be put in their walls. So if you have any questions ask your Resident Assistant. If you can't use nails, tape or stick-up paper works just as well.

Just remember your room and your roomate are going to be with you for thirty-two weeks, so you both need to work together to make your room seem like home.

The Limit shows talent

Jon Edwards

Exploding into action Thursday night, The Limit, a hard-driving Richmond band, opened with youthful energy which hastened to a frenzy. Guitarists Chris Galliffa and David Hunter combined with the rhythm section of drummer J. Mark Scott and bassist Brian Hinson to capture the audience of both students and locals.

In an interview after the performance, Chris Galliffa, who handles the band's public relations, stated that the band's goals are to ultimately become recording stars, and by what Mark Holmberg states in his record review article in the Richmond Times, that with songs like these they're well on their way, and in this writer's opinion, is the music style and talent this school needs to bring in for entertainment.

Blevins shows positive outlook towards 87-88 Cavalier basketball

By John Stith - HC Staff Writer

Robbis Blevins, a rising star on CVC's men's basketball team is dedicated to building a winner.

As a sophomore from Morehead, Ky, Blevins is a 6-2 swingman at the guard and forward positions for Coach Barney Hall's Cavaliers. As one of six returning players from last year's team, Blevins will be counted upon heavily for leadership and natural court sense for the upcoming season.

When asked what he expects the 87-88 Cavalier squad to accomplish, Blevins said that the team hopes to obtain at least a .500 level season for future teams to build upon. Blevins also feels that the college's decision to withdraw from the Kentucky Intercollegiate Athletic Conference will help the team.

"CVC's new schedule will now include more schools in Virginia and only three schools in Kentucky," Blevins said. "This change will benefit the team by having much shorter traveling time and by playing teams on the same competitive level."

Another key to the team's success or failure could be the many new faces on the team. Blevins hopes to use his leadership and experience to show the new players what to expect and how they should conduct themselves on the court.

Blevins also points to the team's execution and inside players as a barometer for the team's success. Blevins also points to returners Mark Johnson, Vic Taylor and Tim Walton as key players.

These players, along with Blevins, will be counted upon by Coach Hall for their leadership in game situations and as academic role models for the younger players.

As for the team's strengths, Blevins stated that team speed, outside shooting and execution will be beneficial to this year's squad.

In all, Blevins hopes this season will be a building block towards a continued winning tradition for Clinch Valley College basketball.

Homecoming/Hoop Tournament scheduled for Dec. 11-12 at CVC

The Clinch Valley College Cavaliers will once again host a basketball tournament. This year, however, the tournament will take on a new format as well as a new sponsor.

The Bud Light/Highland Cavalier Classic Basketball Tournament has been scheduled for Dec. 11-12. It will be combined with "Homecoming '87" events that same weekend.

Last year's tournament was sponsored by the Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Norton and WNVA radio. Prior to last year, the annual tournament had been sponsored by The Coalfield Progress.

The primary reason for the change in sponsorship, according to CVC Alumni Director Steve Mullins was financial backing. "The central focus of the Bud Light/Highland Cavalier Classic is to put on as quality tournament," Mullins said.

As a memento for those who attend the two-day tournament, Bud Light painter's caps will be distributed to all spectators at the door. Commemorative T-shirts and jackets will also be available for purchase.

The combining of the annual tournament and homecoming will be a first for CVC. Since 1983, the Tigers of Campbellsville College have been the Cavaliers' homecoming arch-rival.

The teams scheduled to play in the tournament are the same as those who played in last year's Cavalier Classic - Warren Wilson College, Alice Lloyd College and Bluefield College. Each team will play once each night, with the winners and losers meeting each other in Saturday's final contests.

All proceeds from both nights of the tournament will be put into a scholarship fund set up by the Clinch Valley College Alumni Association.

According to President Jeff Brickett, the SGA tentatively plans to purchase a block of tickets and provide them for the CVC student body.

White ties national mark, sets school records against Asbury

If Mike White does nothing else while playing baseball at CVC, he can take pride in one particular accomplishment - putting his name into the National Athletic Intercollegiate Association record book.

White, now a sophomore, hit four doubles in the first game of a doubleheader against Asbury College on May 1, the most ever in an NAIA contest.

The only other player to equal the achievement is Dan Rahn, who played for Armstrong State in 1982.

It was not until the team had returned from the game that White and Coach Ray Spenilla discovered that the 19-year old second baseman had tied the record.

"It was a real shock to me," White said. "I think it shocked them (the other players on the team) as much as it did me."

Ironically, White had a chance to break the record. Along with his four doubles, White also tripled in his third at-bat to complete a five-for-five outing.

"If I had known that I was going for the record I would have stopped," White said.

Along with tying the national record, White set four school records during the contest - most hits in a game (5), most extra-base hits in a game (5), most runs batted in (7) and most runs scored (4).

White said his record-setting performance had no effect on his teammates other than a few pats on the back. As for himself, White said the performance did not cause him to become big-headed. "I don't think about it too much," White said. "Maybe it hasn't really set in yet." Although he has received no recognition from the NAIA, White did receive an engraved plaque commemorating his performance at the CVC Athletic Banquet at the end of last year.

Before coming to Clinch Valley, White played for Spenilla at Castlewood High School, including the 1983 State Championship team. White credits Spenilla for having a large effect on his batting ability.

Likewise, Spenilla is more than pleased with White's effort. "Mike has the potential to be an excellent college hitter, and his remarkable feat only demonstrates his potential," Spenilla said.

Last year, White batted .326 and led the team in doubles and triples. He feels that he will have to play as well or better this year. "I'm going to have to take on more of a leadership role," White commented. "We'll have several freshmen on the team and they may look to me for help."
