Mistake taught Holbrook tough lesson

CLINTWOOD - When she talks about her baby, Mandy Holbrook fidgets and giggles like a schoolgirl sitting through her first sex-education class.

But Mandy, 19, never had a sex-education class in Dickenson County, where she graduated from high school last year as an honor student.

She learned what sex can mean in a self-imposed, emotional isolation as she struggled through nine months of pregnancy, afraid and too embarrassed to let anyone know.

Mandy Holbrook let her baby die Feb. 24 after giving birth on the toilet in her dormitory bathroom at Clinch Valley College.

She wasn't charged with murder, but in August she was freed on probation after pleading guilty in Wise County to reduced charges of involuntary manslaughter and child neglect. The judge said it was a crime she would not repeat. The prosecutor said Mandy would be punished enough by her memories. When she plead guilty, Mandy begged for forgiveness. She broke down in tears and was unable to explain in court why she did what she did. She still can't explain it.

"I'm just a girl who made a mistake, and I want people to know that I did anything if I could have my baby back... I named him Eric Shawn." - Mandy Holbrook

"I've always tried to be friendly, when people don't know who I am. I'm sometimes afraid to tell them my name. Maybe once they get to know me they won't pass judgment," Mandy Holbrook says referring to the tragedy she experienced last spring when she lost her baby.

It was local headlines for weeks during the months of February and March. A CVC student had given birth to a child on campus and it died.

A dead full-term baby boy was found in a cardboard box under Mandy Holbrook's bed in her Honors Apartment by police.

The events of that Feb. 24 may never erase from Holbrook's history but life must indeed go on.

Holbrook returned to Clinch Valley in the spring hoping to continue her education. For someone who faced charges which included felony homicide with a maximum sentence of 20 years in a state penitentiary and one count of felony parental child neglect which carries a maximum 10 year sentence, life couldn't possibly be easy.

"I could never say my side of the story," says Holbrook referring to all the questions asked by the doctors and investigating police officers.

In an interview Holbrook stated that she wanted to study psychology. "I want to help people to make sure they never make the same mistake," Holbrook says.

"If I could have my baby back... I named him Eric Shawn."

When she plead guilty, Mandy begged for forgiveness. She broke down in tears and was unable to explain in court why she did what she did. She still can't explain it.

She didn't kill her baby boy; She just didn't do anything. She says she passed out on the cold bathroom floor with the baby immediately after birth and never saw him breathe or move. After she regained consciousness, she says, she tore the umbilical cord, flushed the afterbirth down the toilet, washed off the baby and wrapped him in a towel. Still in pain, she crawled to her room, laid the baby in a cardboard box and hid him under her bed.

"I thought he was dead," she says. Her new boyfriend, who was not the father of the baby, found her in pain and took her to the hospital. Several hours later, after repeatedly denying she had been pregnant, Mandy admitted what had happened and told a nurse where she had hidden her baby.

Mandy Holbrook, arranges files in the financial aid office in Smiddy Hall.

"When I was in the hospital, the doctor I had was real hateful... all that he was interested in was, who helped you?" says Holbrook. Holbrook also said the same for the investigating police officers.

The day police discovered the dead baby, Holbrook's bed in her Honors Apartment was pulled from under her bed, but the baby was dead.

Moving toward a new age

Wesley Adams

We'll, it's finally over and it's just beginning. Last week we elected Bill Clinton as the forty-second President of the United States of America. The nation is moving toward a new age as we heads towards the next millennium.

I voted for George Bush. However, the election is over and it is time to move on. The President is the only federal official voted into office by the American people, and as such, truly represents all Americans, regardless of age, race, creed, or political party. And in the last four years, Bill Clinton is that representative of American people and her.

Two months and six editorials and I have finally gotten a response to one of my editorials! I'm a firm believer in democracy: freedom of speech and thought, and that there is a minimum of at least two sides to every issue. I extend my congratulations to the editorials! As you may already know, the music and literary industries have bandied together to convince studio specialists to design a photon suit that can improve the performance of teenagers who are involved in alien invasions. The main focus of my debate with Mr. Wilson is in that broad point of view versus a narrow one. Mr. Wilson has adopted the narrower point of view of focusing merely on the issues of steel use by Powell River Project. He has backed up his arguments with a great deal of data and background information on those who oppose the use of fly ash and sludge.

There is legitimate concern over sludge that can contain heavy metals such as lead and mercury, which can be harmful to animals and humans.

However, the "very little contamination" shown above BPA safety levels. The "very short term" contamination that is referred to by the monitoring station registering near or above BPA level of contaminants distributed throughout the study. Levels were below safety levels prior and since that monitoring period. PFS scientists are not sure if the high levels were from the sludge or resulted from rain runoff from the hill to the salt monitoring system.

I have been involved in discussing her new videos. Madonna is now in miniskirts and cigarettes, and she's wearing a lion's mask. Can we say subliminal sexuality? But let's see what they call a "metal book." Does it mean that less is more? Is it not that "true blue" material gives us a certain type of music?

It's time for "Papa Don't Preach." You have seen her video and know what to expect. She's been given the award for "Outstanding actress." She has earned her place in the history books. Let's be honest with you, the public, and accept that this is true. She transferred to CVC this year. Thus, I am taking to be referred to as "marginally informed and eager to please" without her knowing me. It is not in nature of an editorialist who takes sides. BENNINGTON, Vt. (WPPT) - A University of Bennington student who believes herself to be in a remote and isolated situation has been arrested and charged with indecent exposure. The student, identified only as 18-year-old Sarah Smith, was taken into custody by Bennington police yesterday morning after they received a report of a disturbance.

Smith was charged with indecent exposure and was held in the Bennington jail without bail. She was arraigned in Bennington Superior Court this morning and is scheduled to appear before Judge John Hennessey on Monday.

According to police, Smith was acting erratically and was unable to communicate her whereabouts or condition.

"She was speaking incoherently and making inconsistent statements," said police spokesman Detective Michael Murphy. "We were unable to determine whether she was physically injured or threatened in any way."

Nationally ranked Lady Cavs look for another record season

Michelle Napier
Managing Editor

Brooke CVC women's basketball coach Kim Bynum has a tough act to follow. Her predecessor Preston Mitchell took a dying Lady Cav program on the verge of collapse in 1984 and turned them into winners breaking the school victory record for the past two consecutive years.

Going into this season ranked 17th in the nation, CVC fans' standards for her are fairly high as they look for Bynum and her team to have yet another record setting season and possibly catch their first-ever District 3 title.

"A lot of people, especially the faculty, have been giving me a hard time saying 30-0 is that right? Are you going 30-0?" Bynum said. Luckily the Kentucky native is no stranger to pre-season pressure because she has been a part of winning programs throughout her basketball career. During her five years at Campbellsville high school, she compiled a 142-11 record. Later, as an assistant at Eastern Kentucky University and a graduate assistant at the University of Louisville, the team breaks their respective school winning records.

"I've always been fortunate that every season I have been in the same situation," Bynum said. "This coaches being ranked number one or ranked 17th, but in four seasons you have gone from the hunt going into pre-season in Kentucky, Bynum, however, is not resting on her laurels. She will have her first year at the helm of the Lady Cav program, she can't be satisfied with a pre-season ranking either.

"I don't don't think we have to look for consistent loss leader to go with Collier's post play and Spencer's long-bomb threat while floor general Dick Davis gives the team leadership and quickness.

The fifth spot in the Lady Cav line-up is left for the graduation of Tamara Pears, who will be divided between junior sharpshooter Michelle Niff and newcomer Wendi Collier. Depending on the style of game being played on the court, however, she would use Niff's quickness and shooting ability.

Senior Lady Cavs want to make final year their best

Led by an veteran distilled lineup, the Lady Cavs entered their first ever pre-season ranking coming in 11th in the full NCAA poll.

Senior Wanda Sloke, Rachel Collins, Crickett Adams, and Kelly Sturgill are all re-establishing stars from last year's District 24 runner-up squad, and they want to make their final season count.

When asked what they thought about the forthcoming season, seniors Adams and Sturgill said, "It's a little nervous about it, but we're looking forward into it." They followed by saying, "Hopefully this will be a good year because this is our last year.

Guiding the experienced team will be new head coach Kim Bynum, assisted by Angie Black and Jonathan South.

They're very excited about having Blacky with them on the floor and they're "very glad that the familiar, hard-working face of South will be there." South provides much personal experience to the veteran squad, and Bynum will work primarily with the inside game.

Both will be great assets to the Lady Cavs offensive attack.
