Freshman to rule the school for one day

By Aaron Collier
Staff Writer

The college has a new chancellor, but just for one day.

The National Residence Honorary Hall (NRHH) and the Inter-Greek Council (IGC) combined forces to give students a reason to help the surrounding community: a chance to be "Chancellor for a Day."

And, the winner of the food drive was freshman Morgan Henry. She will work as the chancellor for one day, today, while Chancellor David Prior attends her classes, and even takes her math test.

Each student that brought in one canned food item to the Student Center was entered for a chance to replace the chancellor for one day while the chancellor takes up the role of student.

The main goal of the event was to get students to realize how important it is to help the surrounding community, said NRHH President Joshua Justice.

"One thing that we want students to realize is to remember to give back to the community," said Justice. "They [the community] are a vibrant part of our education here at the college and one reason we are here is because of this community."

The Pound Food Bank will benefit from the food drive with all the canned goods going to help replenish their shelves after the hectic holiday season.

"One reason we really chose the food bank is because people tend to focus on food banks and things during the holiday season," Justice said. "Oftentimes after the holidays the food banks are forgotten and they are often in times of need [of food]"

Jason Lewkowicz, adviser to both the NRHH and the Inter-Greek Council, said that the real reason for the event is to help the Pound Food Bank and raise awareness of the importance of community service on the campus.

"Everyone is excited about the Chancellor/student swap," he said. "But what we also have to keep in mind is the fact we are donating all this food to the food bank in Pound who desperately needs that food."

The idea for the event came from Lewkowicz who participated in the event as a member of the Ambassador Program at Appalachian State University and headed up the event as a senior. He said his hope for the event is that it becomes a long-standing tradition at the college.

"I think with a school like ours it's still relatively young," he said. "There's a chance to start traditions that can be long-standing. I thought this had potential that we could do year after year and become a school tradition."

The response to the event started slow, but by the end of the week the cans started pouring in, Lewkowicz said.

"One person brought in 53 cans," Justice said. "One of the fraternities got together and chose one individual to donate all their cans in his name so that he has a chance of winning."

Lewkowicz said he was nervous early in the week, but after a door-to-door collecting campaign in the resident halls by NRHH members and RAs, his

New York Times' bestselling author James McBride will speak on "The Color of Water: Meditations on Identity" on Wednesday, Feb. 28 at 1 p.m. in the Fred B. Greear Gymnasium.

The lecture relates to his book, "The Color of Water: A Black Man's Tribute to His White Mother," which the college's freshmen read as part of the freshman seminar requirements. The UVA-Wise community was also invited to read the book in preparation for McBride's visit.

"Mr. McBride's visit is a critical part of our first year experience—the opportunity for students to connect not simply with the reading itself, but with the author and with the idea and process of creating a work," said Elizabeth Steele, coordinator for advising, retention, and assessment. "Relatively few of us will get to meet or attend

Lambda Pi Eta, the National Communication Association's honor society, will host James McBride on Wednesday, Feb. 28 in the Jefferson Lounge of the Student Center, at 10 a.m.

McBride will speak about his development as a writer.

The event is free and open to the public. Refreshments will be served.

The busy life of a "Renaissance Man"

John Mark Adrian, has a busy semester underway in Zehmer.

Earlier this week, on Wednesday, Feb. 14, Adrian, an assistant professor in the Department of Language and Literature, presented a paper titled, "The Representation of Court and Local Space in Elizabeth's 1578 visit to Norwich," at the faculty colloquium in the Chapel of All Faiths.

The paper extends research he conducted for his dissertation. Students, faculty and staff learned about the turbulence that was created in the local communities visited by the queen during her progress tours and how it is portrayed in literature.

"I like presenting [my papers] like this," Adrian said. "It gives me a chance to give back to the college, since the paper is based on research sponsored by the college."

He views the feedback that he receives from listeners as an opportunity to gain new or different insights and possibly new topics for further research.

Students in his Shakespeare class (English 406) will be traveling to Staunton, Va. on Feb. 16-17 to see Shakespeare's "Hamlet" and "Pericles" performed at the Blackfriars' Theater.

"This [trip to Blackfriars'] is a tradition that was started before I got here," Adrian said.

"Seeing Shakespeare's works done in a theater that is a replica of the original Blackfriars' in England is a wonderful experience for the students," Adrian said. "It's not so intimidating since the students have already read the plays."

Students are looking forward to seeing a live

Campus News

Campus condoms recalled

After several complaints from students, the college health clinic withdrew the familiar Lifestyles brand latex condoms from its grab baskets over winter break.

The defective condoms are Lifestyles Ultra Lubricated brand latex condoms, lot number 0508060822. They are in a purple package.

College nurse Sheila Cantrell said after several students came to her with complaints of the defective contraceptives, the decision was made to stop distributing the Lifestyles brand.

"Though condoms are used as a contraceptive, our primary interest in providing condoms to students is focused on preventing the spread of disease," Cantrell said.

The office notified the manufacturer of the faulty product, which until now was the only brand the college distributed, Cantrell said.

The office now distributes Trojan brand condoms.

"We are trying to facilitate a relationship with Trojan," Cantrell said. "But for now we just buy them directly from Wal-Mart."

Normally, the office spends less than $200 annually on condoms, Cantrell said.

Sykes, UVA-Wise to make deal

Sykes, Inc., an international company that offers helpdesk, outsourcing, software localization, translation, information development and technical writing services, and UVA-Wise will sign a memorandum of understanding that will ultimately benefit many students at UVA-Wise on Monday, Feb. 19, at 9 a.m., in the Rhododendron Room of the Slomp Center.

"This is the first of, hopefully, many steps, that will build a bridge between us," said David Kendall, chair of the Department of Business and Economics.

Sykes has a history of working closely with colleges and universities in cities where they have divisions. In the past they have endowed the Tampa University business department.

"It is still too early to say exactly what direction our working relationship will take,"

Kendall said. "Once the memorandum is signed more information will be released."

According to the Sykes web site: "Sykes Enterprises, Incorporated, is a family of global companies delivering business process outsourcing services. The top companies in the world rely on SYKES to care for their most valued resource—their customers."

International fair on Feb. 21

The International Programs office is holding an international fair on Wednesday, Feb. 21 at 1 p.m. in the Chapel of All Faiths.

And, students who attend the fair, will have their names entered in a drawing for an iPod Nano.

The purpose of the fair is to introduce students to the study abroad programs offered at the college, said Witold Wolny, field director of International Programs.

Representatives from the University of Istanbul and Monterey Tech Saltillo will have tables and booths offering information about their programs. Representatives from East Tennessee State University, Emory & Henry, and Academic Programs International (API) will also be on hand.

Students attending the fair will be able to gather information about summer programs, semester abroad, internships and other travel opportunities, as well as talk with students currently enrolled in exchange programs, Wolny said.

Wolny said there are additional developments in the college's International Programs office. UVA-Wise has signed an agreement with API, which opens exchange opportunities for students with 32 institutions in eight countries.

And, the International Programs office has also launched a new web page. This page can be found at www.uvawise.edu/international/.

"International travel is a life changing experience for students," Wolny said. The fair is a good opportunity for students to spark an interest in the programs offered by the college, Wolny said.

Don't Stop the War, Solve It

By Raymond Carl
Columbia Daily-Spectator (Columbia U.)

(U-WIRE)MEW YORK—A group of Iraqi sokUers were walking to their rooms. I remember looking and wondering what it would be like to be in their shoes. My family was safe on the other side of the world. Theirfamilywould be cut into pieces if the insurgents found out where they lived. I thfaik about their faces and their fates every time I hear about Columbia University's current generational fad: Get out of Iraq. Now!

The anti-war movementhere at Columbiaclafans this is a war of aggression against Iraqi civilians. They say the U;S purposefully kills innocent pex>le. If you really believe this, then whyntodo something meaningful about it? If you really believe the anti-war propaganada, leave the comfort of Columbia in order to fight this inhumanity which you so adamantlyand easily speak out againstThe reality is that our intent is not andhas never been to killfauiocentIraqis. But in the rush to serve their own btinests, the anti-war propaganada, machin^ overlooks asmall detail: the U'S:S intent was to kill Saddam Hussein and stop the faisurgents.

Many wmlid have you believe that Iraq is hivolved in a civilwlrur between Siunis and Shiites that hasbbea going on for a thousandyea and that we should just get<out of the way. In truth, we caused the civil war by our fiilura to prevent the insurgents from niciting civil war. WB would not be having this debate if the White House and Pentagon had properly managed the beginning of the war, even if it was a mistake to enter mdiefirst place,

Was the war a mistake? Yes, ibut that does not automatically mean we should leave now. We allowed civil war in Iraq and it is our responsibility to sui^ly the Iraqi governmentWith every soklier and dollar they need until the democratically elected government tells us to leave.

Does anyone here in the safety of Columbia know what wiU happen if the U.S. leaves Iraq? I do not, but I think I would like to know before I tun up,the rhetoric knob. Let's say^tbeanli-war movenwnfgetsUis widi^and ttle'U:S^ltiave3' tomorrow. Where will the anti-war movement be if amass genocide takes place when the Iraqi civil war spiralSOUt of control? The reality is that the American public could care less if a few thousand students walk out of a class that, more likely than not, their parents aie paying $40,000 a year for. American opinion toward the war has changed not because of the anti-war movement, but because of death and dollars. The reality is that the hot trash spesved out to the mindless mobby a few people wanting to relive the '70s takes focus away from the real ddiate: What's best for Iraq? The anti-war movement does not know and they are not asking, because they have their own self-serving agenda. How many steps closer will Thursday's spectacle take Columbia to being regarded as a completejoke in political debate by mahistream society? How much credibility are people willing to risk for this season's fashionable cause?

Perhaps the anti-war movement would have more credibility with the American public if they did not try to turn reality into some sort of Star Wars epic. We need a real discussion about what is best for baq, not teenage rage beng spesved into a microphone. That does not happen at a one-way cultlike Teacli-in." Ifyou're lookug for a fad of the week, go fin danother one, because that Lraqi soldier's life you want to leave to the winds may depend on the outcome of this bandwagon.

Greek community provides crucial campus life

The Daily Reveille (LSU)

(U-WIRE) BATON ROUGE, La. - Whenroostpeople think of Greeks, little more comes to muid than visions of John Bdushi chugging Jack Daniels or theracistcomments fixm the fi^ boys hi "BoraL."

As with all reputations, the Greek community was not hampered with this unage of urespnsibility and narrow-mindedness overnight, but over the course of many kxig years existed only for the ostensible pimposes of partymg and bitermhigling with people of sunilar backgrounds and world views.

We have all heard the crazy college stories from our parents' generation, complete with tales of fliaitemitypledges ^ein|^ hazed, sorority girls getting drunk and the racial overtones of what is largely seen as one of the Ust vestiges of Old South tradition.

We have all whnsed theflictionthat exists between some Greeks and so-called GDIs. Of course, no mentkxi OfGreeks would be complete without the obligatoryreferencesto flat straps, boat shoes and North Face jackets.

As a proud member oftheGreek community, I can without reservation say that sraie of the stigmas associated with Greeks do not come wholly unearned.

However, there are quite a few aspects of Greek life most unaffiliated and unfamiliar with the Greek system sunply do not know or wish to ignore.

I know several Greeks who have received academic "holds" simply because thqr were betag investigated by Greek Affahs or the admhiistratim. This khaid ofstliuent hitunidation has a two-fold effect on studait behavior, neither of whkh is Obama is that Obama is not a r^Kiesentative of Black America. If he is elected as ouF44lhRetkient, he will enleroffice without a trackrecord of representhtg Black people-outside of his former occupation as a civilrightsattorney. In that job, though, be didnotjMurtidpate k any landmark trials. Additionally, he does not have a history or agenda of rqiresentbg the poorest citizens of this country, somethbg that has been a consistent trademark of many Black leaders, past andipresent.

Americans across the country view Obama as the safe choice. Black figures that have tun for the presidency-such as Shiriey Chisfaolm, Jesse Jackson, and Al Shaiptoo-are often pushedto the periphery because of their radical agendas. Yet, this has been the tradition of most Black leaders and, unfortunately, Obama seems to deviate fionthis tradition. This is not to say that Obama will not change his position nor should he; he is a man that is in the numkg to become the leader of the Western World. However, Black people must comprehend the notion that he is not a Black leader, but rather, he is a leading Black.

Therefore, the term "progress" in the context of Obama and Bhick America is amisnomer. Before embracing hbn as a Intimate representative of Black America, Black people must look at where his funds are comkg from during the Democratic primary.

Black people must not be amzzed or induced by the unpleite use of rface by Obama. (For instance, using Springfield as a stwrting and rallying pohit for his campaign.) Hopefully, Obama will show Black Americans that he is for them while representing maiginalized groups throughout the United States.

Let us not give Obama credit for being a Black leader the same way we have given Lincota credit for freeing the slaves. Too often, the 37th Congress of the United States, Wendell Phillips, Thaddeus Stevens, and Frederick Douglass are left out of the discourse of the emancipation of slaves. Black history has a chance tObe created; however, progress and liberation are goals that/need to be truly addressed. Only then will ficedomitruelyeroeige.

particularly positive for either side.

It has the fanmediate effect of unfauilyfi-eezing student activity, like class registration or even graduation. This means that some people who might have something to contribute to the investigation would be fearfil of having the same tactics employed on them.

Secondly, it creates an environment where instead of students viewing the adminislratioa as an ally in the fight to promote better behavior, they are viewed as hostile, only decreasing dialogue and hieareasuig animosity. In turn this can lead to cover-ups or lies in order to preserve what fhined rights the oiganliEalions stillhave.

I atgue that the Greek community is a potent drivmg force for this University hi more ways than you might hnagine, and it is certainly willfaig to do everything h can to make h mutually beneficial.

Sports Briefs

Women's Basketball

Senior Sarah Helton was named the Appalachian Athletic Conference (AAC) Player of the Week for the second time in a row after the team defeated Alice Lloyd and Montreat and lost to Bluefield.

Helton averaged 28 points and nine rebounds per game.

Currently, she leads the Lady Cavs averaging 19.3 points and eight rebounds per game.

The Cavs will have one game on Saturday at Union before the conference tournament on Feb. 21.

Baseball

The baseball team has won its first series of the year against Emmanuel College, defeating the Lions in two out of three contests this past weekend.

The Cavs won the first matchup 8-4, lost the second game 14-10, and then pulled out the series in the final game, 14-1.

Homeruns by junior Brock Funk and senior Andrew Anderson helped earn the win for the Cavs in the first game while a two-run triple by sophomore Mike Lang and homeruns by sophomores Edwin Narvaez and Josh Verts sealed the victory in the third.

The Cavs next match-up will be at Virginia Intermont on Feb. 22.

Men's Tennis

The men's tennis team played their first match against NCAA Division I team ETSU on Feb. 3, losing 6-1.

Junior Henning Kuich obtained the only win at the number one seed by defeating Ricardo Rojas 6-3, 6-7, 6-3.

The team faced similar competition when they played NCAA Division II team Mars Hill on Feb. 10.

The Lions defeated the team 8-1 and Henning Kuich once again obtained the team's only victory, defeating John Allen 3-6, 6-2, 6-2.

Women's Tennis

The women's tennis team played their first match of the year against Mars Hill on Feb. 10, losing 9-0.

Junior Rhyssa Phillip had the best showing of the team, losing 9-8 (4). Other notable showing included seniors Nicole Pilkenton and Audra Fritz, each being defeated by a score of 8-4.

Both the men's and women's teams will travel to Chattanooga, Tenn. to face Covenant on March 2.

Baseball team looks to improve once again

By Cody Dalton
Staff Writer

With football season over and basketball season cranking into the final gear, baseball is getting ready to kick off another exciting season here on campus.

After a turnaround season last year that saw the Cavs go from 12-13 in 2005 to 28-19 in 2006, the team is ready to surprise, yet again, in the Appalachian Athletic Conference (AAC).

"This year's team has been working hard to become a whole," said shortstop Jorge LaBoy. "I think this upcoming season the team has been working hard to improve from last year's performance."

"I expect us to perform well this season," said junior pitcher Brock Funk. "We are a little young but, we also have a lot of experience from last year."

The Cavaliers lost six seniors on the team last season, including Nathan Kiser and Wil Childress, who both hit .325. Childress had 41 hits, 4 home runs and 24 RBI for the Cavs, while Kiser had 40 hits, 5 home runs and 32 RBI.

The team also lost Jon Ryan Reed, the Appalachian Athletic Conference batting champion.

"Anytime you lose three hitters like Jon, Nathan, and Wil, it leaves some big holes to fill," Funk said. "As a whole this year we are better conditioned and I believe we will perform better offensively."

While the team will be hurting from the losses of Reed, Kiser and Childress, they have many great returning starters.

Seniors Jeremy Wright, John Bigley and Andrew Anderson lead the team with experience. Wright will be a solid bat and play outfield, while Anderson contributes as a third basemen. Bigley will serve as a pitcher and a designated hitter.

"I think the losses of veteran players effects the team," LaBoy said. "I think we have covered these areas and have a great threat in the middle of our order."

A majority of the team's offense will come from junior shortstop LaBoy and sophomore second basemen Edwin Narvaez. LaBoy hit .340 for the team last season and added 52 hits and a team high 5 homeruns. Narvaez also contributed 48 hits and three home runs, while hitting .304. Both men also gave the Cavaliers 31 RBI each.

"Edwin and Jorge give us a lot of hits and runs," Funk said. "Having two guys like that definitely helps our lineup."

As for the pitching, the Cavaliers will have junior Brock Funk returning. Funk pitched with a 3.58 ERA and holding a 7-1 record in 11 total appearances. He had 2 complete games and led the team in all, but a few pitching categories. Other returning pitchers will include junior David Jones and sophomore Josh Verts.

"We have good pitchers this year," said Edwin Narvaez. "I think we have done a good job filling in our roster holes too. If all of these things work well together, I think we are going to win a lot of games."

The team was voted to finish in 5th place in the preseason poll with 42 votes. The Cavs trailed Tennessee Wesleyan, who had 70 votes, Union with 63, Montreat with 59, and Bluefield College with 45.

The Cavaliers season is already off to a good start, with two victories at Emmanuel College, 14-4 and 14-1, and a loss, 10-8. The Cavaliers have two remaining road contests at Toccoa Falls and one individual contest at Virginia Intermont before they play at home for the first time.

The Cavaliers play their first home game--against West Virginia Tech--on Sunday, Feb. 25 at 1:00 p.m. at Stallard Field.

From the Sidelines

Lady Cavs Serve Up a New Season

Since the sports page already contains spring previews for both baseball and softball, and I already wrote a preview for the golf team in the fall, I suppose that leaves only one sport. Tennis.

I don't think it would be appropriate for me to write a preview of the men's team since I play on that team. Although I may do it anyway if I can't think of anything else to write next issue. So, that just leaves the women.

Daniel Robinson
Sports Editor

The Lady Cavs are coming off an impressive 2006 season finishing with a 15-5 record overall and 6-1 in the Appalachian Athletic Conference (AAC). The team finished second during the regular season before winning the AAC Tournament.

However, the tournament was not an easy victory. The team had to win the tournament outright to qualify for the Region XII Tournament because the top-seeded Union Bulldogs were beaten in the semifinals.

The Lady Cavs managed to defeat Tennessee-Wesleyan, 5-4, in the finals.

"We should've beaten Union and won the conference before having to come down to the tournament," said junior Autumn Lauzon, the current second seed for the Lady Cavs. "But I was proud of everybody that came through."

However, the Cavs fell in the first round of regions to Indiana-Southeast 5-0.

At the end of the 2006 season, the team saw its top three players—Davina Dishner, Lauzon, and Laura King—honored as All-AAC and coach Danny Rowland awarded AAC Women's Coach of the Year.

Lauzon and the rest of the Lady Cavs are confident that they can have the same kind of success this season.

"I'm very excited because I think we can go to regions again," Lauzon said.

The team returns every player from last year's starting squad including four seniors with the experience to lead the team. These include Dishner, King, Nicole Pilkenton, and Audra Fritz.

This does pose somewhat of a problem, though. With four seniors on the team—each one of them starters—can the Lady Cavs expect the same kind of dominance over opposing teams next year?

Ah, who cares? That's next season. This is this season. I'll worry about those questions then.

While there is no preseason poll for the tennis teams, believe me when I say that the opposing teams are gunning for the Cavs.

The top players from last year included both Lauzon and King, who each earned 11 wins on the season. Rhyssa Phillip was next highest with 10 wins followed by Pilkenton who earned nine.

The team is even more consistent in doubles play. The three year team of Dishner and Lauzon won a total of 11 matches last season, as did Pilkenton and King.

With four seniors and two juniors in the starting spots, this team has become a tight-knit group over the years.

"We get along really well and we have a lot of fun together," Lauzon said. "We've known each other from junior tournaments when we were little. There's always been that competition but we can leave that on the courts and have fun afterwards."

The Lady Cavs have only played one match this season against NCAA Division II Mars Hill and were defeated, 9-0.

Not that that means anything. It could hardly even be considered a match since the Cavs had not been able to have a practice due to the cold weather. (Again, if you haven't figured it out, I am very biased.)

As for any team goals this season, Lauzon said reaching the region tournament and defeating Indiana-Southeast is at the top of the list. The team has lost to Indiana-Southeast in the first round of the Region XII tournament for the past three years.

"We've always had to play them [Indiana-Southeast] in the first round and I'd really like to beat them," she said. "That's my biggest goal and I think it's the team's biggest goal, too."

The Lady Cavs have the team to once again win the AAC, but will they finally be able to break the hold that the Indiana-Southeast Grenadiers have over them?

Only time will tell.

Raby-Gentry has high hopes for Lady Cavs

By Reid Salomonsky
Staff Writer

The Lady Cavs softball team opens their season this Friday at the Reinhardt College Tournament in hopes of picking up where last season left off.

The Lady Cavs finished last season first in the Region XII division with an impressive 34-14 record, a 14-2 record against division rivals, and a dominant 13-1 home record.

This season head coach Tori Raby-Gentry has higher expectations than just first in the division.

"We hope to win the conference title, regional title, and compete at the national tournament," said Raby-Gentry.

The only way to accomplish that task is with respect, said Raby-Gentry.

"Our players must respect each other," she said. "They must work together as a team and understand that winning and losing is a team effort. No one person is above the team."

"Our defense has been our saving grace. This year we should have the best offensive line up that we have had in three years. We have more talent in our bench. I think with both moments in place, we are going to put up more runs, which will take some of the pressure off of our pitchers."

Raby-Gentry said the team's personnel is loaded with more talent than any other she has ever worked with. She said that no single player can carry the team.

"We have some great players, but over the past couple of years, in clutch situations... anyone can be a star," she said. "That's what we like to focus on more as a team."

"The honest truth is on any given game day, any one of our players has the capability to be the hero. That's what we are proud of. I know that sounds a little cheesy, but softball is a team sport--one person can't do it all."

The home opener for the team will be March 1 against the University of the Cumberland at 2 p.m.

College participates in flag football tourney

By Whitney Bentley

On Dec. 28, intramural coordinators Chris Davis and Joel Williamson headed to Pensacola, Fla. with two of the college's flag football teams to play in the national tournament.

The men were represented by the Kappa

Sigma Sigma team and the women by a combination of the Naturals and the Phi Sigma Sigma sorority.

"The trip to Pensacola was a great experience," said Kari Osborne, a member of the Naturals and the women's team captain who had been to the tournament before.

There were 25 men's teams and 12 women's teams involved in the tournament. "I feel sure they were the best teams in the nation," said Davis.

Kappa Sigma Sigma played Southern Baton Rouge in the first game, losing 44-13.

The second game however, they won 20-12 against Arkansas-Pine Bluff. The men faced the University of Western Florida in their final game, losing 36-6.

The women lost their first game to Western Kentucky 60-0 and their second game to Georgia Southern 32-7.

Davis said he is already anticipating next year's tournament that will be held back in New Orleans next year.
