The UVa-Wise Cavs and SGA will host the University of Rio Grande Red Storm tomorrow for the first basketball homecoming in 20 years in the convocation center.

SOA Elections Co-ordinator Ashley Cvelnich, the chairperson of the event, said there will be a homecoming court like the annual football homecoming held each fall semester.

"We want to encourage students to support all our athletic teams." Cvelnich said, "not just any single sport."

Nominations for homecoming court took place on the online student portal Feb. 1 through Feb. 3. Most of the elections ended in ties and runoff votes were collected before students were able to vote for king and queen Feb. 13 through Feb. 15.

The final decisions were emailed to students and the results for king and queen will be revealed Saturday by Men's Lu Prior during hall Ume of the women's game.

Chancellor Prior had previously agreed to crown the king and queen for see Homecoming, page 2

A six-story library is among several upcoming building projects that will join Smiddy Hall's recent face lift and the completion of the convocation center in the expansion of the UVa-Wise campus.

Construction on the library, which will be the tallest building on campus, is expected to begin in July of this year, said Vice Chancellor for Finance and Administration Sim Ewing.

The project is currently in the final stages of preliminary design, said Ewing, and while many details are not set in stone, some things to look forward to will be collaborative work spaces, 24-hour components, updated technological resources, quiet places for focused concentration and a 60-desk seating area.

"This project will become the visual focal point of campus and, with its design, a focal point of student and faculty collaboration," said Ewing.

Thanks to an $83 million donation made by Richard and Leslie Gilliam, plans to add 11,000 square feet to the fitness center and to retrofit Greear Gymnasium are also underway.

Construction on the new health and wellness center is expected to begin in summer of 2012 and to be completed by fall of 2013.

The two-story center will be attached to the current fitness center and will boast a new array of top-of-the-line fitness equipment, a juice bar, outdoor lounge area, locker rooms and automated maintenance for the machines.

The new center will cater not only to students and employees, but to the community as well.

"Everybody needs a chance to get out and get fit and this will provide that opportunity," said Julie Scott, director of Sleep Student Center. "We are very excited about it."

Although some renovations to Greear Gymnasium are yet to be decided upon, the main lobby, restrooms, locker rooms and front facade will definitely be updated, said Athletic Director Danny Sterling.

Other renovations will include facilities for golf, tennis and cross country.

"Greear Gymnasium has served the college, community, and athletic department well for many years, and this renovation will be a welcome update to this facility," said Sterling.

Improvements to the gym are expected to be completed by the spring of 2013.

Each new building and renovation adds to the expansion the college has undergone since opening its doors to 109 students in 1954. Not only will the new projects beautify and simplify life for the current more than 2,000 students and faculty members, but will appeal to prospective students and their families as well.

Push to name convocation center growing

The Coalfield Progress

Following the sudden death of Dmid Prior, UVa-Wise's seventh chancellor, a community campaign to have the school's convocation center named for him has begun.

Prior, 68, died Feb. 2 of an apparent heart attack.

The school's faculty and students have signed proclamations requesting the facility be named in honor and memory of Prior.

UVa President Teresa Sullivan also voiced her support for the college's pursuit during an eulogy she delivered at Prior's memorial service on Feb. 6.

Now, county supervisors have joined the campaign with the unanimous adoption of a resolution Thursday.

The resolution notes Prior's many contributions to the college and community, namely his desire to offer Southwest Virginia students the opportunity to attend college, the increased student enrollment, and the development of a solid academic program,

Obesity continues to plague US

By Todd Oalyne
Opinion Editor
inigt7h@uvawise.edu

CNN posted an article Wednesday detailing some of the problems obese children are facing today, notably including not being able to fit inside standard desks.

As long as I can remember the issue of obesity in America among adults and children has been a hot topic. Just turn on the news and there is some nightly special on the subject. Yet, obesity has continued to rise regardless of the nation labeling it a "serious problem."

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, 33.8 percent of U.S. adults and 17 percent of children were obese in 2010. If this has been labeled a "serious problem" for so long, how are these numbers so high? But even more alarming than the statistics is the mere fact that we are at the point where children's desk sizes are becoming an issue. How many health issues will these children have in twenty years? This should be a red alert that we are past the point of a "serious problem" and to the point of a national emergency.

Measures have been taken by the government and health organizations to combat obesity, but obviously they are not working to the extent they need to. The reason why is simple. All the legislation and programs in the world can be created but, as American citizens, we have the right to eat what we want and to exercise when we want. So the responsibility falls on the citizen. This means eating healthier and exercising more or just at all. Even more fundamental to curbing obesity, however, is changing the mindset of society from quantity back to quality.

Watch almost any fast food commercial and you'll see the main selling point is not the food, but the amount for the dollar. They are using this tactic because we have asked for it as consumers. Economic conditions are poor, but buying excessive amounts of food for cheap is not a monetary factor, it's a result of the idea that more is better. This is not right. Eating to the point where you feel bad is not right. Eating should be about taking your time and enjoying your meal and not about taking the next bite.

A change in this viewpoint would not entirely solve the war on obesity, but it would definitely be an essential step. If we don't make some changes soon, obesity numbers will continue to grow along with the desk sizes.

Youth continue to remain optimistic

During the prime of the Occupy Wall Street movement, students and recent graduates advocated a reform on job prospects for young Americans.

While many students agree that the job marketplace after college is more competitive, the fact remains that many young Americans still are upbeat about the future.

During the Great Recession, the Millennium generation was the hardest hit by cutbacks and layoffs, and for college grads, the average graduate has about $200 in student loans to pay off.

This week Congress pushed the hopes of the Millennium generation even further back by extending the payroll tax.

While Congress continues to focus on elderly spending, young Americans are being ignored. All of these factors will signal voting turnout for young Americans to reach historic lows across the nation.

The Millennium generation, that matured during the worst recession since the 1930s is also surprisingly optimistic and prepared for an uncertain future based on facts.

According to a New York Times poll, three-fourths of those under 45, do not expect Medicare to provide benefits for them and more than two-thirds of that group believe Social Security will not be available for them.

Even though the future for our generation is clouded, the fact remains that young Americans are just as tenacious as their ancestors, and with an attitude like that many young Americans will likely have a bright future.

Valentine's day is overfitted

If you fell flat on your face instead of getting swept off your feet I bet pas! Tuesday, don't worry, you probably aren't alone.

Valentine's Day is a big holiday over something created to sell greeting cards and lots of candy. The best part of Valentine's Day is the 50% off Reese's Cups that you have to fight over in Wal-Mart the day after.

There's nothing worse than seeing someone in tears because their significant other didn't get them a dozen roses or they were surprised with the pink bear instead of the white one.

Who cares? If you like someone enough to date them, or spend a significant amount of time with them, one day out of the year shouldn't put them in the doghouse.

New state laws go too far

By Cameron Parsons

The Commonwealth of Virginia has been the leader of politics in the history of the Americas since it elected the first colonial representative House of Burgesses in 1619.

Virginia's proud political history has seen its share of ups and downs over the years, but this year has to be considered one of the lowest points.

The direct descendant of the House of Burgesses, the Virginia House of Delegates has passed measures effectively banning all abortions in the state.

This law will give a fertilized egg legal status as a person. Specifically, House Bill 1 on Personhood states that it "provides that unborn children at every stage of development enjoy all the rights, privileges, and immunities available to other persons, citizens, and residents of the Commonwealth."

Obviously, this law conflicts with the landmark 1973 Supreme Court decision in Roe v.

I'm not trying to be bitter about the whole day - while I woke up sick that morning, my day ended well because I ate lunch with my three best guy friends, hung out with my e-board during a meeting and watched Indianu Jones with someone who makes me smile to end the night. No money had to be spent on flowers, chocolate or champagne to make me happy.

It's about being with the people who you enjoy spending time with all the time/ If you're only spending noteworthy time with someone one day out of the year, you have bigger issues to tackle than not buying someone roses.

Don't worry if you're suffering because you forgot Feb. 14th is a "special day" or because your gift wasn't good enough. Try telling your significant other what you like about them or surprising them with something out of the blue.

Spontaneous gifts are far better than something that's expected anyway.

Wade, and will meet legal challenges.

However, the most egregious aspect of this bill is that government officials are asserting that they know everything about life and how we all should live.

No one has all the answers about life, and no one except yourself knows how you should live your own life.

Many immigrants came to this country to escape religious persecution and tyrants telling them how to live their lives.

Now, the West established government in country is attempting to revert to that status.

This country was founded on the ideas of liberty and freedom for all.

Arresting, trying, and convicting a mother for murder by simply having a miscarriage seems like far cry from any idea of liberty and freedom I have ever had.

The people pushing their views of how we should run our lives on us need to take a step back and leave our rights, specifically women's rights, alone.

We must stand up and defend our rights before we lose them all together.

Tennis teams return experienced players

By Hayley Gallmayer

hmg4v@uvawise.edu

The men's and women's tennis teams are expected to have a strong start to the season with more experienced players and quality practices.

Junior Jack Holcomb is the top seed for the men's team and senior Whitney Boiling is the number-one seed for the women's team.

I expect as to have a solid year and really make some improvements from last year, said Holcomb. "We've made some key additions to the team without graduating anyone."

Last season, the men's team went 1-10 overall and 0-4 in conference play. At the end of the year, Holcomb, along with senior Mark Collins and senior Matt Sisk were named to the Mid-South Conference all academic squad.

The women's team played 4-8 overall and 0-5 in conference play, and last year's young team is looking to improve their record this season with better teamwork.

We know each other and we're meshing a lot better, especially with our tennis skills," said sophomore Brianna Stallan. "I think that both boys and girls will have a better chance this year making it further into the tournament."

Both teams are headed by Emma Rowland, who is beginning his twentieth season as the men's head coach and eighteenth season as the women's head coach.

Rowland is "hoping to improve on last year's record and to have a better showing in the conference than last year," he said.

In previous seasons, poor weather has delayed and cancelled practices as well as games. The weather so far this season has been mild enough that the team has been able to get outside.

"We've gotten in more practices than we normally do this time of year and we're ahead of where we normally are," Rowland said. "We're in good shape to get the season off to a good start."

The first home match for both the men and women is scheduled for Feb. 25 at 1 p.m. against the University of the Cumberlands.

From Harvard without an athletic scholarship, to being undrafted, and then being given a chance with the two NBA franchises, Jeremy Lin has landed on his feet with the New York Knicks.

Lin took over the point guard position for Mike D'Antoni's squad on Feb. 4 after an injury to Baron Davis.

The central California native made his head coach and the Big Apple proud, setting career highs in points, rebounds and assists, while leading the team to a victory over New Jersey.

Jeremy struck gold with his first career start in Utah! He chalked up 28 points and eight assists. In Washington, Lin crossed up former first pick John Wall and recorded his first double-double.

Last Friday night, Lin showed off better than Rebecca Black in a Katy Perry music video, when Kobe Bryant and the Los Angeles Lakers came to Madison Square Garden. Linsanity was in full force as the Harvard grad exploded for 38 points and dished out 10 assists.

Tuesday was Valentine's day as he scored the game-winning 3-point basket with a half second to go in Toronto.

Some experts feel that Lin is the real deal, while others are not quite sold. Lin has a glaring hiccup average in his stats - 8.4 per game.

Another issue is what will become of him with the return of Amare Stoudemire and Carmelo Anthony.

Can Jeremy Lin weather the storm and continue his production on the court with his two All-Star teammates returning? I'll find out.

The five professors currently up for tenure evaluation are expected to hear the results by fall 2012.

Baseball picks up from last year

By Jonlan Childress

The UVA-Wise baseball team hopes to pick up where they left off last year as Mid-South Conference Haslem Division Champions.

The Cavs start the 2012 season with a rough 22 consecutive games on the road, six of which are Mid-South Conference games and one a match up with powerhouse Tennessee Wesleyan.

After the long road trip, the Cavs are set to play 15 straight home games, with the home opener set for March 15.

Pitching is a key factor in the Cavs' favor, as the team is returning four key starters from last year's team.

Senior Ryan Crosby returns to the mound after leading the Mid-South in ERA with 1.87. This season, Crosby is already proving to be one of the best pitchers in the Mid-South by posting a 1.12 ERA through two games and striking out 17 over eight innings pitched.

Junior Cody Benley will join Crosby as the Cavs' top pitchers. Benley held opposing hitters to a .252 batting average last season.

Senior Chris Smith and Junior Justin Wilson are also looking to contribute to the Cavs' stellar pitching.

Both players had limited appearances out of the bullpen last year, but will be relied upon as starters this season.

Junior Ryan Ward, senior Jonathon Cox, sophomore Jtish Massie and freshman Ben Coffman will also be counted on to produce quality innings and a strong effort out of the bullpen.

The Cavs return a lot of power at the plate.

Junior outfielder Brett Hylton returns from leading the Cavs in batting average with .350 and on base percentage with .419.

Junior Tommy Meier hit for a .347 average and led the team in hits with Hylton.

Jordan Fifer | The Highland Cavalier

Sophomore outfielder Brett Hylton (8, left) slides safe into third base during Game 3 of the Cava four-game sweep over West Virginia Tech March 12 and 13, 2011. Hylton went on to score a run.

Kirk Jennings, a junior first baseman, is the team's returning leader in home runs and led the team in slugging percentage.

Sophomore Mason Mays is back in the outfield after proving himself last year as one of the Cavs' go-to men at the plate and junior Brian King looks to bounce back after an injury-laden 2011 season.

New player senior Freddy Qaray will provide explosive power for the Cavs behind the plate already leading the Cavs this season with a .400 batting average, with one home run and five runs batted in.

Freshmen Steven Allen, Juan Dominguez, and C.J. McAndrews look to round out the Cavs' infield.

A poll conducted among Mid-South coaches in the preseason ranked the Cavs as being expected to finish sixth, but the team hopes prove people wrong and finish ahead of the pack.

The Cavs have started out the season 2-3 and hope to gain some momentum with a four-game series against Point University in East Point, Ga. tomorrow and Saturday.

The Cavs' first home stand will be March 15 through April 4. The Cavs will face Mid-South opponents Shawnee State, Cumberlands, and Georgetown College.

The Cavs will also host rival Emory & Henry, Montreal, Southern Virginia University, and Tennessee Wesleyan.

Two losses in the last week have caused the men's basketball team to drop to 5-9 in Mid-South Conference play.

The Cavs traveled to St. Clair College on Feb. 9 to face the Patriots.

Though the Cavs stuck close to the Patriots for most of the game and cut an 18-point deficit in half with 8:29 left in the game, they couldn't outdo the Patriots' hot hands, who shot a blistering 58 percent for the game and 63 percent in the second half alone.

Senior center Josh Jordan's two technical fouls from the Feb. 4 game against Georgetown College caused him to sit out.

so his teammate tried to make up for his absence.

Senior guard Travis Berr's flayed his heart out in the 38 minutes he was on the floor, dropping 39 points.

He was followed by senior guard Norris Gaskins, who scored 20 points and sophomore guard Darius Smith with 19.

Even with the three combining for 78 points, the Cavs still fell 18-91 to the Patriots.

On Feb. 11, the Cavs traveled to Campbellsville, Ky. to take on the Tigeis of Campbellsville University.

Both teams came out of the gate slow, but the Tigers found their stroke and jumped out to a 29-14 halftime lead and kept the upper hand, winning the game 76-61.

What proved to make the difference in the game was bench scoring, as the Tigers outscored the Cavs 42-4 in bench production.

Twenty of the Tigers' points came from sophomore forward Kevin Bobson.

The Cavs were led by Jordan with 15 points and Smith with 10.

Usually high-scoring Beiry only managed three points.

With these two games, the Cavs fell to 8-13 overall.

Two upcoming Conference games give the Cavs hope to salvage the rest of the season.

The Cavs are set to host the University of Rio Grande for the Cavs' senior day on Feb. 18. That game will begin at 4 p.m. in the convocation center.

The Cavalier Softball team has started the season 0-2 with a severe loss on Feb. 11.

The Cavs were defeated by host non-Conference opponent, Emmanuel College, in a doubleheader, losing 15-1 in the first game and 8-3 in the second.

"There were a lot of first game jitters going on against Emmanuel," said first-year Head Coach Karen Bitter after the game.

Sophomore Allyssa Zebrowski scored the only home run in the fifth inning of the first game.

Zebrowski continued to post two hits in the final game.

Joining her on the scoreboard were sophomore Kristina Romualdo who went 2-4 and senior Ashlee Washburn who played for 1-3 with an RBI to finish the game.

Despite the heavy loss, the lady Cavs are eager to regain lost ground in the first home game of the season.

"I think being at home against Milligan will be exactly what we need to bounce back," Bitter said.

The Cavaliers' first home game of the season will be a doubleheader today at 1 p.m. at Cavalier Field against Milligan College.

The women's basketball team had a rough week in Mid-South Conference play, losing both games by more than 20 points.

On Feb. 9, the Cavs traveled to St. Catherine College Patriots.

Though the Cavs held close to the Patriots in their last pairing on Jan. 5., only losing by 12 points, they weren't able to slow the Patriots this time.

St. Catharine gained an early lead and never let it go, taking an 89-55 Conference win.

The Patriots were led by sophomore forward Rianne Hofstetter who scored 23 points on 6-8 three point field goals. Junior forward Reilly Poirier came off the bench and contributed 20 points for the Patriots.

Junior forward Chelsea Cluesman led the Cavs with 20 points and nine rebounds and senior forward Kristen Muir contributed 12 points, adding to her strong last-season campaign.

The Cavs traveled to Campbellsville, Ky. on Feb. 7 to take on the No. 20 Campbellsville University Tigers.

g Though the Cavs shot 53.8 percent from the field, with Mullins grabbing 21 points, Cluesman 20, and senior guard Amber Carter 17, missed free throws ultimately hurt them. The Cavs fell to the Tigers 107-78.

With these two losses, the Cavs drop to 1-13 in Conference play and 8-20 overall.

The women are set to play in the Mid-South Conference Tournament play-in game with the University of Pikeville at the end of February.
